UK Outlook for Thursday 15 Jul 2021 to Saturday 24 Jul 2021:
Wednesday is expected to be mostly dry, with variable cloud giving some sunny spells. The odd isolated shower remains possible, however. Likely turning cloudier across northwestern areas later in the day, with some rain developing in these parts. Temperatures initially sitting at average or slightly above. Generally a mixture of sunny spells and showers for a couple of days will follow this, though showers likely less frequent in comparison. Most likely turning settled through the remainder of the period, but there is still the chance of a few showers developing during the day that can't be ruled out, especially in the southeast. Despite this, more dry weather than recently is expected, with variable cloud and sunny spells. The trend of temperatures being slightly above to above-average will continue.
